Downward Wage Rigidity and the Intensive and Extensive Margin of Labor Adjustments

Enhanced access to administrative data has provided new insights into wage and earnings changes and labor input adjustments. In particular, there is mounting evidence supporting the notion of (nominal) wages being downwardly rigid and pointing towards an allocative effect of wages on both working hours and employment. This paper aims at reconciling these empirical findings within a parsimonious search and matching model with labor input adjustments along the intensive and extensive margin. I show that an ad-hoc constraint on the extent of permissible wage cuts can explain the asymmetric decomposition of earnings changes into hours and wage changes observed in the data.
